

Your 5-point personal security plan

Introducing P.I.P.P.A.

The best way to implement your P.I.P.P.A. personal security plan is with 'joined-up thinking.' Your home, work and online lives overlap. So you should not prioritise securing one area over and above the others.

Plan

Think about likely threats and what you would do if they happened. Plan contingency travel arrangements and keep emergency contact details easily accessible.

Information

Keep your private information private. Most targeting is initially done online. Think about what you put on the internet and use good IT security practices.

Predictability

Avoid predictable routines, especially during enhanced periods of vigilance. Be aware of fixed times, locations and routes in your day. Vary them as much as possible.

Profile

Be aware of your environment. When leaving a location, take in your surroundings. Act confidently. Looking less like a target makes it less likely hostiles will target you.

Anonymity

Do not publicise who you are. Try not to link home and work life and be aware how snippets of information can be combined to create a full, exploitable picture of you.

Remember:
report anything you think is suspicious. In doing so, you are helping to ensure your safety and the safety of those around you.
